1. The first part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the
 2. various methods which have been proposed for the determination of
 3. the rate of reaction. It is shown that the method of initial rates
 4. is the most reliable, and that the method of half-lives is only
 5. applicable to reactions of first order. The method of integrated 6. rate equations is also discussed, and it is shown that it can be
 7. applied to reactions of any order. The method of differential 8. rates is also discussed, and it is shown that it can be applied to 9. reactions of any order. The method of graphical representation 10. of the rate of reaction is also discussed, and it is shown that it 11. can be applied to reactions of any order. The method of

The rate of reaction is defined as the change in concentration of a reactant or product per unit time. It is usually expressed in terms of the concentration of a reactant or product, and the time taken for the reaction to proceed. The rate of reaction can be determined by measuring the change in concentration of a reactant or product over a given period of time. The rate of reaction can also be determined by measuring the change in pressure or volume of a gas over a given period of time. The rate of reaction can also be determined by measuring the change in color or pH of a solution over a given period of time. The rate of reaction can also be determined by measuring the change in temperature of a reaction mixture over a given period of time. The rate of reaction can also be determined by measuring the change in the rate of reaction over a given period of time. The rate of reaction can also be determined by measuring the change in the rate of reaction by measuring the change in the rate of reaction over a given period of time. The rate of reaction can also be determined by measuring the change in the rate of reaction over a given period of time.

The rate of reaction is a measure of the speed at which a reaction proceeds. It is usually expressed in terms of the
